Let's bust some myths: Are cyber security specialists isolated?

Transcript:

Ahh yes, the common misperception that everyone's in their bedroom wearing a hoodie and looking into a computer screen. It's not the case in cyber security at all. In fact, cyber security is quite a social profession, we have to talk with all different industries and we have to interact with all different kinds of people.

(Additional title card) Is there a type of person who suits a cyber security career?

I didn't realise that there'd be so much communication with different parts of the business. So, you have to have good people skills, good customer service skills and I think that's something that really surprised me. You can do the coding stuff and that's a lot of what I do as well, day to day, managing stuff on a computer screen and making sure actions are taken care of, but there's also that other side. You have to diversify.
